Inside this document

- 01 Product facts and claim evidence
- 02 Creator-ready brief
- 03 Claims and disclosure gate
- 04 Usage rights and permissions
- 05 Delivery and approval
- 06 Next action

Product facts and claim evidence

- The product name, variant, price, availability, features, materials, instructions, limitations, and offer terms match the current approved source.
- Every performance, comparison, durability, ingredient, environmental, testimonial, or outcome claim has an approved source.
- Customer review language is quoted accurately, kept in context, and marked for permission or platform-rule review before reuse.
- Unsupported superlatives, guarantees, before-and-after implications, and invented proof are removed.

Creator-ready brief

- The target buyer, situation, problem, product role, hook, proof point, shot order, call to action, and required disclosures are specific.
- The creator can film each shot with the product, location, equipment, time, and access available.
- Required words, prohibited words, pronunciation, captions, aspect ratio, duration, safe margins, raw-footage needs, and filename rules are listed.
- Creative freedom is clear: required beats are separated from optional delivery ideas.

Claims and disclosure gate

- The named brand approver has checked claims, pricing, promotions, testimonials, comparisons, and required disclosures.

- The brief does not ask the creator to hide sponsorship, fake personal experience, invent results, or present a script as an independent review.
- Regulated, medical, health, financial, legal, safety, children, alcohol, or other sensitive claims are held for qualified review.
- If a claim source is missing or unclear, mark it HOLD and remove it from the creator brief.

Usage rights and permissions

- The agreement identifies creator, brand, channels, territory, usage period, organic usage, paid usage, whitelisting, editing, raw footage, exclusivity, and renewal terms.
- Music, stock footage, fonts, logos, locations, people, screenshots, reviews, and third-party products are cleared for the intended use.
- The brief does not expand usage rights beyond the signed agreement.
- A named owner confirms whether the brand may cut, caption, translate, resize, or combine the footage.

Delivery and approval

- The client receives the editable brief, final PDF or export, source and claim notes, approval log, creator handoff message, and revision deadline.
- All bracketed placeholders are replaced or marked for approval.
- Links open, exports use the agreed format, and filenames identify product, creator, concept, version, and date.
- Nothing is sent to a creator, published, boosted, or reused until the named approver clears the relevant stage.

Next action

- Send the client only the items that need a decision: claims, rights, required shots, disclosures, and final call to action.
- After approval, send one clean creator handoff and keep the source notes and signed usage terms with the final files.
